

Public Notice:

The International Association of Privacy Professionals (IAPP) has submitted an application for accreditation in the specialty field of Privacy Law. The IAPP has received accreditation from the American Bar Association. The definition of Privacy Law proposed by the IAPP is as follows:

A Privacy Law Specialist advises clients regarding the legal issues raised by the collection, storage, sharing, monetization, security, disposal, and permissible uses of information about individuals, businesses, and organizations.

The IAPP's application for accreditation in the field of Privacy Law is available for inspection at the Minnesota State Board of Legal Certification's office. If you would like to review the application or submit comments regarding the application or this proposed definition, please contact the Minnesota State Board of Legal Certification by April 30, 2019.
